Scope The aim of this sub-theme is to revisit and re-imagining the purpose of businesses organizations as both a phenomenon and concept.

Topics

- What might be the foundational values of a market system that works for all citizens? How can we reform the assumptive primacy of economic success over social and humanitarian wellbeing? How does the existence of specific institutional networks such as the UN Global Compact for Businesses, the Principles for Responsible Management Education, and the Responsible Research in Business and Management network contribute to more meaningful and more humanitarian organizations? What more can be done to better integrate the whole human being and intermediate organizations with the institutional tools of global capitalism?
- What might be the purpose of business organizations in such a market system? How can companies make the new statement of purpose of the US Business Roundtable a reality beyond rhetoric? How do we make corporations serve the interests of their stakeholders? How can we reform the narrow and essentialist assumptions of human behavior that have driven our models of corporate governance? Should the purpose of the firm go beyond wealth creation?
- What might be the purpose of business schools related to the purpose of business organizations? What is their role in redefining the assumptions of capitalism? How can business schools introduce an ethos of humanitarianism into management education?
- What are the necessary epistemological assumptions for a re-imagined purpose of business organizations (Rohtbart, 1998; Singleton & Strait, 1999; Whetten, 1989)?
- What are the necessary ethical assumptions related to the purpose of business organizations (Laird, 1946; Whetstone, 2001; Arjoon, 2007; Mele, 2019)?
- What are the necessary theoretical assumptions and theories that shed light on the the purpose of business (Christensen et al. 1979; Andrews, 1980; 1989; Porter, 1981)?

Specification Your short paper should comprise around 3,000 words (inc. references, appendices & other material).
